Nordstrom reopens after shooting

Official: Counselors will be on hand all week

Chicago Tribune

Nordstrom just off of North Michigan Avenue bore few signs Sunday of the fatal shooting that had taken place less than 48 hours earlier amid a crowd of holiday shoppers.

The luxury department store reopened for the first time since police say 31-year-old Marcus Dee shot his ex-girlfriend, Nadia Ezaldein, there Friday night before killing himself in what police described as a domestic-related shooting.

Employees exchanged hugs in the first-floor accessories department. A large bouquet of flowers was displayed near the escalators on the first floor with a handwritten note to Ezaldein and her family saying, "We will miss her."

"We just decided yesterday that it felt OK to open today," Nordstrom spokeswoman Tara Darrow said Sunday morning. "Sometimes coming back to work and being surrounded by co-workers helps with processing things."

Darrow said the decision to close the store was meant to "give our employees time to regroup and support each other and just out of respect of our employee's family."

Ezaldein, 22, was pronounced dead Saturday afternoon after she had been put on life support. After an autopsy Sunday, the Cook County medical examiner's office said she died of a gunshot wound to the forearm and head. She had been working at the store as a seasonal employee since Oct. 21, Darrow said.

Ezaldein, who had attended the University of Chicago, had been stressed because of her inability to afford tuition, which resulted in her taking a seasonal Nordstrom job, her family members said Saturday.

Family members said Ezaldein was shot before she could come home to a surprise birthday dinner after her Black Friday shift.

Through heavy sobs, Ezaldein's sister, who asked not to be named, said Saturday she was in shock that her sister died "so young."

"She's the smartest person I know," the sister said. "She didn't deserve to die."

On Sunday, Darrow said the store did not have an estimate on how much it cost to close Saturday—the day after Black Friday—adding that she didn't think the store "would provide something like that."

"At this point that's just kind of been the least of our concerns," she said, adding that three counselors were on site to talk to employees throughout the week. "Individually, we'll work with employees. If they need to adjust their schedule, we will deal with that."

Individual employees were not available to speak to a reporter.

Sylvie Hau, 48, who was visiting Chicago for the weekend, said she was surprised the store already was open again and that she "felt funny" about going inside even though she shops at Nordstrom "all the time."

"I guess business must go on," Hau, of Connecticut, said on her way into the Shops at North Bridge mall, which houses the Nordstrom store at its west end.

Chicago resident Paul Hurn said he wasn't fazed by the shooting but felt bad for the woman's family.

"It doesn't concern me at all, otherwise I wouldn't be here today," said Hurn, 45, who said he spent some time browsing at the store. "I've been in the South Side all my life, so I'm used to this."

Family: Nordstrom shooter had harassed victim

Chicago Tribune

Family members of Nadia Ezaldein said Saturday her ex-boyfriend, Marcus Dee, had tormented their family in the year before he shot her and killed himself Friday at Nordstrom.

According to a police report, Dee, 31, approached Ezaldein at the department store off North Michigan Avenue, and they spoke. He took out a gun, and as Ezaldein walked away from him, he shot her before shooting himself in the head. He was pronounced dead at the scene about 10:25 p.m. Friday, the report said.

Police said they recovered a .45-caliber semi-automatic handgun.

Ezaldein, 22, was pronounced dead Saturday afternoon after she had been put on life support.

She had begun dating Dee in August 2012 after meeting him through her older sister's roommate, family members said Saturday. Dee physically abused her throughout the relationship and, in December 2013, he threatened her by inserting a handgun into her mouth, they said. The incident resulted in a hospital visit and Ezaldein ending the relationship, they said.

In the year since, Dee harassed the woman and her family by making threatening calls to her father and siblings, family members said. The victim changed her phone number three times as a result, they said.

Ezaldein also considered requesting an order of protection but backed out when Dee threatened to kill himself if she went through with it, her family members said.

They said she also was hesitant to report abuse or harassment because Dee's parents are police officers.

"She thought his parents could cover it up," another sister of Ezaldein said.

A woman who answered the door Saturday at an address associated with Dee answered "no" when asked if Dee lived at that address. She declined further comment. Neighbors said two police officers lived at that address.

According to court records, Dee had petitioned to have a temporary restraining order issued against a relative of Ezaldein for stalking. That petition was denied by a Cook County judge last April, court records show.

The day after Dee's petition was denied, the relative of Ezaldein petitioned for a restraining order against Dee but that too was denied, court records show.

The Second City's best holiday shopping advice

The Second City NETWORK

» @SecondCity Netwk

Black Friday and Cyber Monday are just the beginning. Welcome, Americans, to the official start of the holiday shopping season.

No matter how much you all-caps the message "Christmas was invented by corporations to get consumers to spend more money! Boycott Christmas and don't be a part of their system!" on your social media feeds, the power of paid advertising and creepy websites that email you, "Did you forget about this item?" will drown out your anti-consumerism.

Give in, and get spending. But before you do, read our best holiday shopping advice, collected for you with love (and for free) by The Second City's staff and contributors.

"Stay home!!! But if you absolutely MUST shop ... full body armor is recommended." —Andrea Miller

"Stretch your rotator cuff for quick elbowing, and don't eat gassy foods. Nobody likes a farter in line." —Carrie-ann Pishnak

"Keep a running list of gift ideas all year. That way, you don't resort to buying a 'Downton Abbey' reader's guide for your mom on Christmas Eve." —Chrissy Borne

Jason Draper at his home in West Pullman on Nov. 15
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

A LONG ROAD AHEAD

Homicides up on 116th Street, but Red Line plans could pave new way

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Jason Draper and his wife Leonore, an anti-violence activist, were at an April fundraiser to raise awareness about gun crime when he decided to duck out early to grab some food and head home to rest. Leonore stayed behind to chat with her college roommate.

On his way out the door, Jason Draper gave his wife a kiss and said he'd see her later. But it was the last time the Drapers, college sweethearts married for seven years, would truly be together.

As he ate his meal in the bedroom of their home at 116th and Laflin streets, Jason Draper heard a "pop, pop, pop" outside.

Then a knock at the door. Something is wrong with your wife, a neighbor told Jason in a panic. There at the curb, his wife lay slumped over in her car with a bullet wound to the arm.

"I thought she was going to make it," said Jason Draper, 35. "I just sat [at the hospital] and waited."

Leonore Draper, 32 and a grants analyst for Chicago Public Schools, suffered a heart attack and died two hours later at Advocate Christ Medical Center in Oak Lawn, Jason Draper said. Her killer has never been charged. And Jason Draper says he hasn't lived in their 116th Street home since.

"I miss her every day," Draper told RedEye. "I talk to her every night [and tell her] 'I love you and I am going to find out who killed you.' "

Leonore Draper, who also wrote grants for an anti-violence organization in Chicago, died as a result of the violence she was fighting. Chicago police say she was an innocent bystander in a gang fight and was one of six people to die this year from gun violence in West Pullman on or near 116th Street, a mostly residential South Side road not known for killings, according to a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data as of Sunday afternoon.

Her death was part of an uptick this year in homicides along a stretch of 116th Street—from Laflin Street to Michigan Avenue—in West Pullman, which Chicago police attribute to gang violence. While 116th Street has struggled this year, the rest of West Pullman has seen a drop in killings this year.

Boarded-up homes and vacant lots with overgrown weeds have become symbols of economic downturn, residents say, but West Pullman may attract more commuter foot traffic if the CTA moves forward with its plan to add a Red Line stop at 116th Street and Michigan Avenue as part of a proposed Red Line extension from 95th to 130th Street, a transit-starved area for decades.

"We're waiting on grocery stores, on retail stores. I would describe it as being abandoned. Some parts even look like a third-world country," said Diane Latiker, who moved to 116th Street and Michigan Avenue nearly 30 years ago. "When you get past 115th [Street], it's like it stops. The economy stops. And then past 122nd [Street], it picks up again because those are nice residential homes."

In the past two decades, Latiker's watched residents and businesses leave West Pullman instead of invest in the community. West Pullman counted 29,651 residents in the 2010 Census, down 19 percent from 36,649 residents in the 2000 Census.

The proposed 116th Street and Michigan Avenue station would be served by buses that currently run on 115th Street and Michigan Avenue, both major commercial thoroughfares, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said.

Eleven years ago, Latiker transformed her West Pullman home into the headquarters for her organization Kids Off the Block, which provides mentoring and tutoring services to local teens who want alternatives to the dangerous streets.

Seven years ago, she turned a vacant lot into a memorial to those killed by gunfire under the age of 25—after Blair Holt, a 16-year-old high school student, was gunned down on a CTA bus while trying to protect a friend.

Latiker said the memorial has 374 stones, each with a gunshot victim's name written on it. She has more than 500 stones left to add.

"When Blair Holt was killed, it was such a terrible crime," Latiker said. "I wanted to shock the young people."

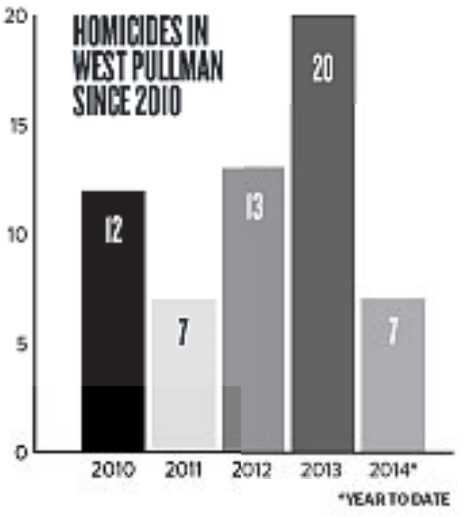
There have been seven killings so far this year in West Pullman—six on or just off 116th Street and one homicide on 117th Street. The most recent homicide was Nov. 16 when Dalon Mobley, 30, was killed in the 11600 block of South Racine Avenue.

Larry Watson, the commander of the Chicago Police Fifth District, which covers West Pullman, said each of the 116th Street killings this year were tied to gangs but declined to give details because charges have not been filed in six of the seven homicides.

A 2012 map of Chicago gangs from the Chicago Crime Commission, a public safety group, shows that 116th Street, from Michigan Avenue west to Interstate 57, is run by the Gangster Disciples. The Latin Kings rule 116th Street east of Michigan Avenue.

Watson said there is no link between the 116th Street killings this year.

"Realistically, there's no direct correlation between any of them other than the geographic location," Watson said.



Overall, West Pullman's seven homicides this year is an improvement from 2013, when 20 killings were reported in the community, including three killings on or near 116th Street. Ald. Carrie Austin, whose 34th ward includes West Pullman, did not respond to a request for comment.

Watson credited the decline in homicides to police identifying people who could be shooters based on their criminal records and affiliations with gangs and then letting these people know they are on police radar. Police also tip their hats to those residents cooperating with police investigating crime.

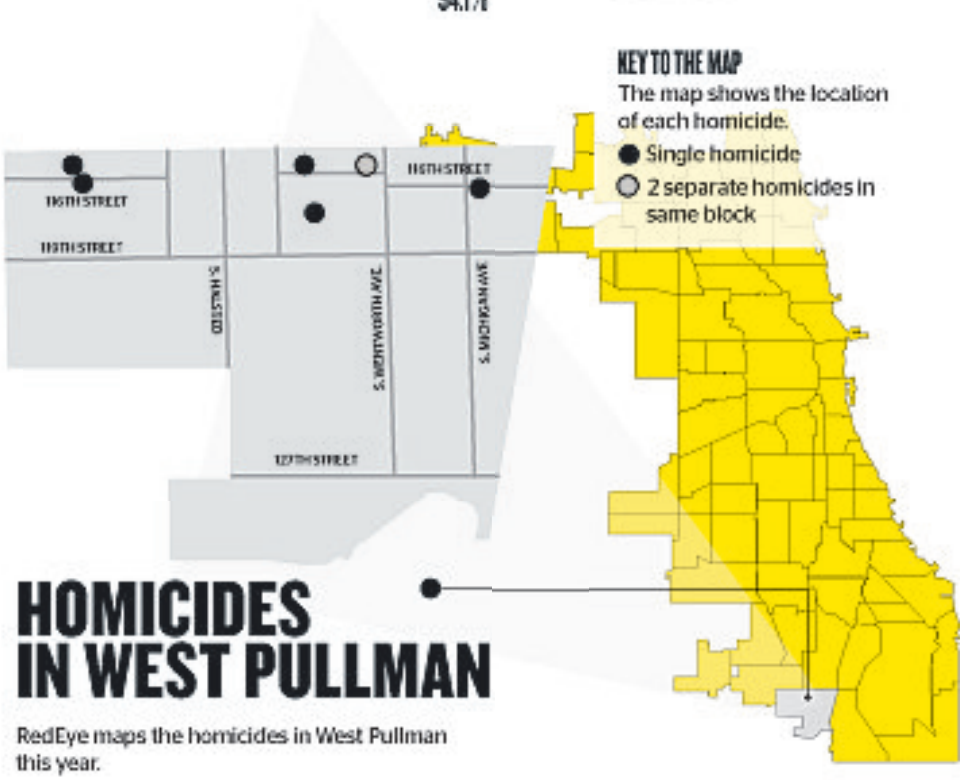
He is trying to sell his 116th Street home, where furniture he picked out with Leonore is now covered in sheets and their belongings sit in boxes. Jason said he plans to move to Oak Lawn because he heard it's a "good area."

He had heard the same about West Pullman when he moved there eight years ago. He said he never had a problem with crime there before this year, and never considered moving. Now he knows he cannot stay.

"My wife's not here anymore. This is our home. It's not the same," Draper said.



Gang violence makes for noted mean streets

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

There are a few streets in Chicago that have earned a reputation for gun violence.

Take 79th Street, for example. The street, a major artery that slices through the South Side communities of Auburn Gresham, Chatham, Greater Grand Crossing and South Chicago has seen six homicides this year, according to Chicago police data as of Sunday afternoon.

On the West Side, Hamlin Avenue (approximately 3800 West) in Humboldt Park and Logan Square, from Iowa Street to Diversey Avenue, logged four homicides so far this year, as of Sunday afternoon. Those areas are also having trouble with gangs, police said.

Art Lurigio, a Loyola criminal justice professor, said homicides tend to be on major thoroughfares because they serve as dividing lines between gangs. Also, large streets typically have more social activity with bars and restaurants so shooters may track their victims to places that the victims typically visit, Lurigio said.

"[The victims] are more readily accessible targets only because they're more likely to be found" at spots they frequent, Lurigio said.

Fitness classes offered at Maggie Daley Park

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

In yet another sign that the much anticipated Maggie Daley Park will open soon, the Chicago Park District is set to offer fitness and other programs at the yet-to-be unveiled renovated field house on the site.

An ice skating ribbon at the downtown park—just east of Millennium Park—is scheduled to open in December and, according to the park district's website, winter classes will be offered at the field house there early next year.

Registration for winter programs—ranging from adult kickboxing to children's crafts—begins Tuesday when Web registration is available for all parks east of California Avenue, according to the park district. Internet registration starts Monday for parks west of California. In-person registration begins Saturday.

Adults living in Chicago can pay $30 for 11 sessions of weekly fitness classes at the fitness center, which start in January and go through March. Prices double for adults living outside of Chicago.

The field house was closed during construction of Maggie Daley Park and used as a construction office before it was overhauled. The renovation included repairs to the facade, new interior finishes, improvements to the bathrooms and locker rooms, reconfiguration of space inside the facility and replacement of the entry doors, heating, air conditioning, plumbing and electrical systems.

Prices vary for the programs. The rest of the park is expected to be open by spring.

Mayor: Wilson resigned without severance deal

The white police officer who shot and killed an unarmed black teenager in Ferguson, Mo., resigned from the force without any severance deal, the mayor of the St. Louis suburb said Sunday.

Wilson

The officer, Darren Wilson, announced his resignation late Saturday, saying he feared for his own safety and that of his fellow police officers after a grand jury decided not to indict him in the fatal Aug. 9 shooting of 18-year-old Michael Brown.

"There will be no severance or extension of benefits for Darren Wilson following his resignation," Mayor James Knowles said at a news conference in which he outlined new incentives to bring more African-Americans into the Ferguson police force.

Over the next several months, Knowles said, the city will unveil a program in local public schools that will seek to forge a bond between police officers and young people. That is in addition to the planned civilian review board to oversee police tactics and the recruitment of African Americans to a department that has been overwhelmingly white.

Knowles said Sunday he was unaware of any specific threats to Wilson and did not give him a deadline for a resignation.

Wilson, who said he had acted in self-defense and that his conscience is clear, had been on administrative leave and in seclusion since the incident.

Protesters clash with police in Hong Kong

Hong Kong police baton-charged and pepper-sprayed thousands of pro-democracy demonstrators in the early hours of Monday who were trying to encircle government headquarters, defying orders to retreat after more than two months of protests.

Data show 2014 may be hottest on record

This year may eclipse 2010 as the hottest since the 19th century, a sign that long-term global warming is being stoked by rising greenhouse gas emissions, scientists say. The U.N.'s World Meteorological Organization will publish a 2014 preliminary ranking Wednesday.

Pope speaks against Islamic militants

Pope Francis said Islamic militants were carrying out a "profoundly grave sin against God" in Syria and Iraq, calling Sunday for inter-religious dialogue and action against poverty to help end conflicts there. The pope spoke on the last day of his weekend trip to Turkey.

The Northern Illinois Huskies will play for the Mid-American Conference championship later this week. NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

Huskies deserve a hug

If it weren't for NIU, Chicago-area football would be ultra depressing

SACKED AGAIN

Bag Boy

It's an amazing time of year, the holiday season.

It's a time to reflect on where we've been, where we're going to and what it is we should be thankful for.

And all I can say, after about five minutes of deep reflection, is we live in the absolute sinkhole of football.

The Illini, of all teams, might be the bright spot! Bowl-eligible at 6-6! They defeated that other football juggernaut, Northwestern (5-7, thanks, guys) to become bowl-eligible.

This is sad commentary on 1) local football, 2) the Big Ten and 3) our country in general for rewarding such mediocrity with a bowl game. I'm wondering how many Illini fans they'll actually convince to attend the game.

Wait, there's more. Notre Dame. At 7-5, virtual gods around here, except they just got smoked 49-14 by USC. Hold the victory march fight song. I'm not sure the ACC is the correct conference for these guys. I'm thinking more the MAC.

Where, again, the entire area has been saved by Northern Illinois University.

Huskies, we thank you for maintaining some pride around here. They're 10-2, just trounced Western Michigan 31-21 and have a date with Bowling Green on Friday for the MAC championship.

We have to love these guys. Literally, they're all we have. May I suggest to their athletic department that we move at least some of their games to Soldier Field so locals can see what a real football team looks like? DeKalb is great and all, but oh, that drive. Nothing but corn.

As for the professional level, you already know. As bad as the Bears are, let me suggest: They're going to finish 8-8. Check it: home games with nasty weather against Dallas, New Orleans and Detroit. All very soft teams when it comes to outdoor December football.

Of course we lose at Minnesota—just because. I'm sure Trestman will outsmart himself this time as well and kick a field goal on first down.

And that gets them to 8-8. The good news: not horrendous, not embarrassing.

The bad news: Of course, we're 8-8! The McCaskeys would never right that ship! Why would they? We're average!

1	Make a sports prediction for December.	Jay Cutler will throw four picks and look like he doesn't want to be on the field. Oh wait, he does that EVERY week.	Santa will not be bringing the Bears a playoff spot, just a big bag of reindeer manure.	I predict that the Bears offense will be colder than the wind chill.	Team USA wins the roller derby World Cup in Dallas this weekend. Chicagoan Jackie Daniels is named MVP.	Ray Rice signs with a team and will soon make millions again to run around on some grass. Life is really messed up, dude.
2	The next time Chicago fans see Lance Briggs, what will he be doing?	Praying he was playing with Brian Urlacher again. "Dear Grabowski, please bring No. 54 back to help me ..."	Going over the menu specials at his restaurant, the Double Nickel.	Missing his exit interviews to attend the Double Nickel Smokehouse 2 opening.	Getting a neck trim at the barbershop, hopefully.	He's a "cooking enthusiast," so on a special sports "Injured-But-Not-Even-Good-When-Healthy" episode of "Chopped"?
3	Now that the Bulls and Hawks are back from their road trips ...	... we can say goodbye to following the Bears the rest of the season.	... we can have Chicago teams winning at home again. LOOK AND LEARN, BEARS!	... no more 9 p.m. tipoffs and puck drops keeping this old lady up!	... they can help me polish off all these Thanksgiving leftovers.	... I'm not gonna lie, this is the saddest Five on Five question ever written in the history of time. Pass.
4	What is causing the construction delays at Wrigley Field?	What's the hurry? We've waited 108 years, what's 90 days?	Everybody is waiting for their kickback. It's called "The Chicago Way."	The ghosts of a goat, a black cat and Sam Zell.	Must be that damn goat again.	Too many Bud Light cans and Chicagoans' tears lodged into the foundation. Slowing down the process.
5	Joakim Noah regained his "bounce." Where was it before?	Reggie Rose had it. He promised to give it back weeks ago, but you know how that goes.	He was using the wrong hair conditioner.	Check his clothes dryer. rimshot	It must have got left in the Bulls' locker room, with Rose's best moves.	Crammed into his throat, making it impossible for him to talk above a whisper in postgame interviews.

WELL TRAVELED

The annual "circus trip" was great to the Blackhawks and fairly kind to the Bulls—the Hawks went 5-1 while the Bulls went 4-3. It's understandable if you were busy eating/cursing the Bears/eating some more the past two weeks. Here's what you missed. REDEYE

MILES TRAVELED

Bulls: Approximately 6,269
Blackhawks: Approximately 5,785

STANDINGS

Bulls after: 11-6, 1st in Central (1.5 games ahead of Milwaukee)
Blachawks before: 10-7-1, 4th in Central (5 points behind Nashville)
Blachawks after: 15-8-1, 3rd in Central (3 points behind Nashville)

BEST WIN

Blackhawks: 4-1 over the L.A. Kings on Saturday. It might make the Hawks feel better about losing to the Kings in last year's Western Conference finals.

WORST LOSS

Bulls: 103-88 against Sacramento on Nov. 20. The Bulls actually led by seven after the first quarter before falling apart.
Blackhawks: 4-1 against Vancouver on Nov. 23. This is by default, really, considering they won all their other games.

PLEASANT SURPRISE

Bulls: Jimmy Butler. Everyone knows he plays a ton of minutes. But ranking ninth in the NBA at 21.9 points per game? That's a huge step up from last season (13.1).
Blackhawks: Daniel Carcillo. Two goals and two assists are a windfall for a guy who isn't expected to score. Plus, that royal wave he gave the L.A. crowd after a late-game fight was hilarious.

THE MOUTHWATCH

"No matter what happened on that day, no matter how the whole situation went down, there has to be a change."
—St. Louis tight end Jared Cook, on the "don't shoot" gesture in support of Ferguson protesters that he and four teammates made before Sunday's game vs. Oakland.

THE FINISH LINE

HOROSCOPES

TAROT.COM

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It doesn't matter if you are running behind on a job; everything still takes longer now than you originally planned. Rather than worrying about yesterday or tomorrow, focus on the present to increase your efficiency today.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your resistance to distractions crumbles today as you grow increasingly bored with your current work. There's nothing wrong with taking some time to play as long as you don't avoid your responsibilities in the process. Temporarily losing yourself in the crowd might be all you need to revitalize your spirit.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Declining a social invitation may be the wisest thing to do because it's all too easy to scatter your energy today. Instead of evaluating all the options and imagining the best possible outcome at every turn, simply follow your intuition.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
Although your friends and workmates are fantastic sources of wisdom now, the financial decisions you must make are yours alone. Making a tough choice today prevents a more serious headache down the road.

Aries March 21-April 19
Oftentimes, you can run into a wall, get up and continue in the same direction as if the obstacle has vanished. But other times a much-needed reality check stops you in your tracks. There's no need to rush to get somewhere else; count your blessings rather than the miles ahead.

Taurus April 20-May 20
You may have high hopes about opening your heart and sharing your feelings today. However, someone's cold shoulder might cause you to change your mind. Consider the alternative ways to say what's on your mind.

Gemini May 21-June 21
You are so excited by all the possibilities ahead that you could lose touch with the relationship dynamics right in front of you. Take time to appreciate the people currently in your life, even if they fall short of your dreams.

Cancer June 22-July 22
You can work yourself up into a state of agitation because you fear being rejected, especially if you have something significant to say. Acknowledging your vulnerability is a good first step to a meaningful conversation.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
A plethora of big ideas are floating around in your head today, yet it might be too soon to let others in on your thought process. Take your vision to the next level before expressing what's in your heart.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your decisions are complicated by someone else's assumptions or limitations. You may be willing to move forward with a project or deepen a relationship, yet it takes two to tango. The real trick is knowing how to share your feelings without getting hooked by your own expectations.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
You don't know what to expect now because people are acting out of character. The best thing you can do is use this as an opportunity to initiate an honest dialogue.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
You are your own greatest enemy if you let doubt stop you from performing a job that you haven't done before. Don't waste energy trying to talk yourself out of giving it your best; instead, push ahead methodically without clinging to any unrealistic expectations or preconceived limitations.

You may now fist pump with the bride

Nicole "Snooki" Polizzi traded the Shore for the aisle this weekend when she wed boyfriend Jionni LaValle, eonline.com reports. The bride, who's now a mother of two, has come a long way from the reality show hot tub, though she did tweet that she and her new hubby were hung over Sunday. "Jersey Shore" castmates JWoww, Sammi Sweetheart and Deena served as bridesmaids and the event's 500 guests received bottles of Snooki's perfume—which we can only imagine smells like club sweat and tanning lotion—as party favors.

Back to the Beach

THE QUOTE

"CAN SOMEONE EXPLAIN THE PLOT OF THIS TO ME?!?! I HAVE NO IDEA #Worst ChristmasEver"

—Aubrey Plaza, in a tweet Saturday about the debut of Lifetime's original movie "Grumpy Cat's Worst Christmas Ever," in which Plaza voiced the titular feline

That light saber, though

The Internet-absorbing public had its collective mind blown Friday when the trailer for J.J. Abrams' highly-anticipated "Star Wars" sequel "The Force Awakens" streaked across our screens. So far, we know the Episode VII action picks up back on what certainly looks like Tatooine, with a new robot-volleyball hybrid looking sidekick, a variety of spacecraft and a sick-looking three-pronged light saber.
